What a Difference a Fly Line Makes by ALLAN EKERT

An activity that we do often in our weekly casting group is a rod testing session. This consists of having everyone place their rod in a circle so that each person has a chance to cast each rod in turn. I sometimes throw in a few of my rods to make things interesting. My rods range from very cheap to expensive and include 4 or 5 identical rods. The identical rods are matched with different line and leader setups. To avoid preconceived ideas about rod brands, I mask the information about the rod with tape. This is probably not necessary in the case of most newcomers who have yet to lean that "sage" is not just an herb they grow in their garden. Working in pairs, the group then spends about 5 minutes "testing" each rod with short casts, long casts, and roll casts. Then they must write up their findings on the sheet provided:

Rod: State Brand name written on blank (if visible)

Weight: What weight line is the rod rated for? e.g., 5 weight (guess if it is covered up)

Comments about Line: Does the line work with this rod, how does it feel, what taper does the line have?

Comments about the Rod and Line: Some rods are identical but have been setup with different lines. Pay particular attention to the way the rod responds to the line and comment on the way the rod and line work together.

Rod	Weight	Comments about Line
Comments about Ro	d and Line:

The handful of people who read these articles are probably part of this casting group and know about this already. Those who haven't been involved will be wondering where all this is leading. The reason I am writing about this comes from the discussion and questions that this activity generates. The "testing" leads to conversations about fly rods and fly lines and what a difference a fly line can make.

Of the many things discovered and talked about during these casting sessions, the biggest eye opener for most people is how fly rods perform with different fly lines. When you only own one or two outfits that have been put together by someone in a fly shop, you are not always aware that there are other options. It is only as you try a variety of rod and line combinations that you can see and feel the difference. This is where a casting group with a range of rods and lines to try is invaluable. It also helps to have a casting instructor who has too many rods and lines.

As an aside, I wrote an article about fly lines back in 2015. Back then, I did a Google search and counted over 60 different fly lines on the market, and that does not include all the no-name brands from China. Although there are so many brands on the market there are only a handful of manufacturers who make these lines. I could only find 6 major manufacturers of fly lines in the world (again, excluding China). If you do the maths, you can see that many different brands come out of the same factory. I think if I were to count fly lines and manufacturers today the figures wouldn't be much different. You can see an updated list at the end of the article.

The difference a fly line makes really became obvious when comparing identical rods set up with different lines. Five 4 weight rods were assembled with various lines and leaders. The rods were definitely at the cheaper end of the market but when they were matched with the right line, they performed very well and scored quite highly in the opinion of the casters. When the rods and lines didn't work together, the results were equally obvious.

Comments about how the rods and lines worked together left people asking lots of questions about fly lines. When you have spent as much money as I have on fly lines, you take it for granted that everyone knows all there is to know about fly lines. That wasn't the case within our group, and it may not be the case with you. So, for those who are beginning their fly-fishing journey, I need to go back and explain a few things about fly lines. If you already know these things, you can skip this section (you probably haven't bothered to read this far anyway!).

As I mentioned earlier, I have written about fly lines on several occasions in this column, but I am still only scratching the surface on the subject. If you want the whole picture there's Google and plenty of books, videos, and magazine articles by more knowledgeable people than me. One of the most authoritative figures in the design of fly lines is Bruce Richards of Scientific Anglers. He is considered by many to be one of the top fly casters and instructors in the world and what he doesn't know about fly lines is not worth knowing. His book, "Modern Fly Lines", published in 1994, is still regarding as the 'bible' on fly lines and sells for over $200 when one can be found.

President's Report

Hello members.

I don't know how everyone else is feeling, but I am getting very sick of this windy weather!!! It seems like the weather is good when I have to work, then when I get a few days off it turns to crap. Hopefully this will improve in the near future.

I recently had a phone call from a member who had stayed at Noonamena and was unable to get the hot water heater working, normally the heater will ignite when the hot taps are turned on, no other steps should need to be taken. I don't know if any other members have had problems with the heater.

Any problems at either Noonamena or Koongara should be reported directly to committee members or the shack wardens.

At our last committee meeting, due to the issues with the Bendigo Bank it was decided to move the club accounts to the Commonwealth Bank of Australia.

This will be done in the near future.

A refund of $4500 is to be made to the Treasurer, this will repay all the money that the treasurer put into the club.

Once again a big thank you to John for doing this.

At our next meeting the guest speaker will be Jules Stevens, who will report on her recent and successful experiences at the WWFFC which were held in Scotland and Canada.

Martin Hingston. President FFCT.

New Members:

The President and member officially welcomed our newest member Stephen Hill #498 to the Club.

Club Insurance:

As the invoice of $5880 exceeds our allowable normal payment of $2000 it must be approved for payment by the members tonight. The Secretary noted the correspondence with 'InTas' and the reasons why other companies will not submit a quotation prior to the President opening it to the members for discussion.

All agreed that it should be paid being the lowest.

Gary Cullen moved the motion that the FFCT pay the nominated amount, seconded by Charles Peck – and carried unanimously.

Martin reminded the members:

- of the 'fly bowl' which provides good value of flies at $1 each.
- To send photos and articles of outings to the editor for inclusion in the newsletter.

Fly Tying Nights:

This is held on the same night and place as committee meetings. (All welcome)

Club Shacks:

Pine

Any members, particularly new ones that are unsure of any shack procedures should ask prior to heading up or stay with an experienced member.

The members were reminded that the direction of the gas switch in the gas cage indicates which bottle is currently being used. The switch should not be placed in the vertical position because the next member will not know which bottle is being used.

Members are to report any faults or shack issues to the warden or Club committee rather that attempting to fix it.

Koongara:

The existing bunks will be resized once Graeme has returned and fully recovered. There will be some inconvenience to members staying at the shacks, but the result will be worth it.

Other General Business:

Chris noted that he has had no feedback from the St Patricks College. So, it is possible that those classes may be ended.

Fishing Reports:

Lowlands: Four Springs is providing some excellent fishing with plenty of insects present, the duns appear at about 11:30am and continue through the day. Big Waterhouse has also yielded some good fish.

Highlands: Little Pine, Fergus and some Western Lakes trips by members resulted in fish that are long and lean. The smaller maiden fish are in excellent condition. Reports that Lake Crescent fish are as big and fat as ever.

Club Raffles:

The night's raffle was drawn by Keith Blewett and won by Peter Ray.

Next Meeting:

Before closing the meeting Martin noted that Jules Stevens if available will be our next guest speaker on her recent experiences in WWFFC in Scotland and Canada.

Meeting Closed: 8:00pm

Th President directed the members to tonight's fly-tying team Gary Cullen, Stephen Hill, and Alan Taylor. Gary and Stephen will be creating their versions of parachute hackle flies and Alan will be tying his version of a stick caddis.
